Coxswain Clarke Develops Tonsilitis, and Longacre Visits a Dentist and Has Two of His Teeth Yanked Out.

By Ralph D. Paine.

Lendon, June 29.-Hard luck hit the Yale crew to-day, but to no alarming extent. Clarke, the coxswain, who has felt a bit off for two days, developed a bad sore throat and had symptoms of tonsilitis last night, and it was found to-day that he could not leave the house, so he was sent to bed. He will be out of the boat, however, only until Wednesday, when, Cook says, Clarke will be holding the tiller ropes

This morning Wheelwright steered at first, and then the First Trinity coxswain was borrowed. He steered satisfactorily.

Longacre suddenly developed severe neuralgin in the face last night. He took the train to Reading, six miles away, to consult a dentist. English dentists preserve the methods of the dark ages with a heritage of prehistoric ideas, so he yanked two teeth from the suffering Longacre, Instead of treating them. The big oarsman felt ponsiderably done up when he returned this morning, and so did not row.
